In an effort to provide current technology to our patrons, the time has come again to upgrade the library's computers. The five patron computers were purchased in 2001 and were beginning to show their age. However, like every other business, there was not a lot of money for this upgrade. As a result, we got creative with our solution.

Instead of purchasing seven new computers for the staff and patrons, the library purchased two new computers for the staff. The current staff computers were purchased in 2005 and still have some life in them. These two computers were cleaned of all programs and reconfigured as patron computers. They are loaded with Microsoft XP and Office 10. Since they are not loaded with as many programs as they had as staff computers, they run very fast and should have several years of life left in them.

In 2008 the library purchased three additional laptops due to the demand for laptop usage. After the purchase the library had five laptops loaded with Westlaw and Lexis Nexis as well as Microsoft Office. These laptops were circulating frequently. However, the vendors decided that libraries with laptops were taking their business away. Attorneys were borrowing laptops when they needed to do research and not committing to an online access plan. So as each of the library's contracts expired the vendors refused to include laptop access in the new contracts. Today the laptops are still available and are used for various purposes, but they are not getting the usage they got a couple of year ago.

The library has taken the three newest laptops purchased in 2008 and reconfigured them as patron computers. Although some patrons may not prefer using a laptop while in the library several patrons have enjoyed the ability to remove the laptop from the patron computer desk and move to a study carrel or the lounge area by the television for more privacy and space. These laptops are connected to the Wi-Fi network so moving them around the library does not cause any disruption in service.

All patron computers are connected to printers and all printing is still 10¢ a page. All computers have usb ports. Remember to bring your flash drive so you can save your documents and not pay for printing.

The library is very appreciative to everyone for their continued support of the library.
